Independent Cancer Patients' Voice
(ICPV), UK

I am a relatively new member of the EORTC Patient Panel, but I am an experienced patient advocate within research. For me, it is so important that the patient voice is heard, and patients represented in all research across the world. I believe that with my networking connections with UK and European cancer research organisations and with my patient support network I can represent a very diverse group of patients, carers and family members who have been affected by cancer.

It is by ensuring we have as many voices represented as possible within the EORTC Patient Panel that we can understand, recognise, and make decisions on what is needed and will benefit patients directly in research and treatment.
